BLACK WATER

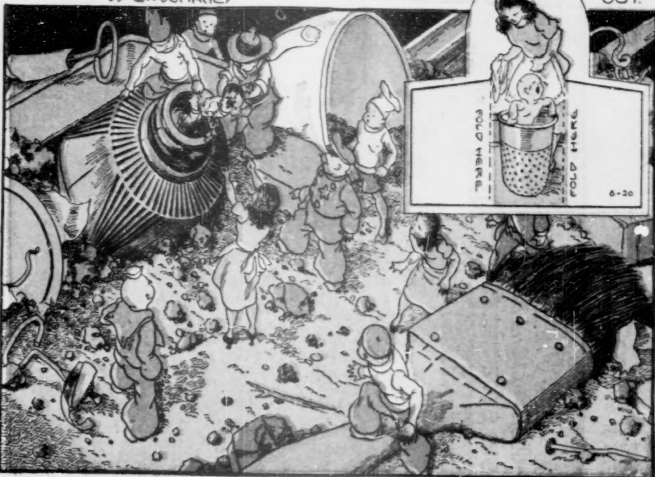

NIPPER is one of the Teenie Weenie youngsters who has a mighty urge to visit the world outside the Teenie Weenie village. He is only a little more than an inch tall, but he makes up for that in the number of inches he can travel in a remarkably short time. He has to be constantly watched because he will run away at every opportunity. His mother and the rest of the Teenie Weenies are much concerned over these sorties, for a Teenie Weenie child would be as tempting a morsel for a toad as a plump worm. Nipper has been talked to, scolded and even switched on his tiny legs with a blade of grass. But in spite of all that, he hasn't lost his lust to travel.

There is nothing to do but to keep a sharp parental eye on Nipper, and sometimes he manages to wiggle off in spite of his mother's watchfulness. One of the Teenie Weenie Policeman's tasks is to watch the roving Nipper, but the Policeman has so many other duties that most of the watching falls on the patient mother. Nipper disappeared right under his mother's eyes on his latest and most prolonged sally. He had been playing with a poppy seed bag right under the dining room table where his mother was cutting out a pattern for a new apron, when she suddenly discovered that he was gone. An unsuccessful search of the house and the village filled the poor mother with anxiety, for a large toad had been reported in the vicinity.

An alarm was given and all the little men rushed in from the Teenie Weenie garden where they had been working. They spread out around the village and searched for nearly an hour before the little runaway was found. The Cowboy discovered Nipper at the dump where the big people throw away their trash. He had climbed up and fallen into an old ink bottle, where he had waded about in nearly a thumbful of dark blue ink. When he was fished out he much resembled a bit of blotting paper, but his spirits were not at all dampened.

"Darling!" exclaimed his mother, when she clashed her ink-soaked son in her arms. "You're a bad boy to run away and frighten me."

Mother's concern had little interest for Nipper, who was busy looking at himself. Then in a burst of understanding he pointed toward the ink bottle and said, "E-e-e! Black water!"

It took three thumbfuls of warm water and much scrubbing to satisfy Nipper's mother that her son was clean again. Nipper shed a lot of tears before the "black water" was removed.
